Durham Launches New UDO Search Feature

New Feature Enables Easier Searching and Sharing of Durham's Regulatory Development Document

DURHAM, N.C. – Durham residents, builders, and developers interested in everything from fence standards to zoning regulations to landscaping requirements can now more easily find that information.

The Durham City-County Planning Department has launched a searchable and mobile-friendly feature to its Unified Development Ordinance (UDO), which can also be found on the Development Services Center website.

The UDO, established in January 2006, is one of the primary regulatory documents for development in Durham County. This new feature allows users to:

- Search for applicable regulations with ease using quick navigation through direct links to any referenced section, table of contents, and various search features.
- Share individual sections of the document through email, Facebook, Twitter, and other social media platforms.
- Define terms through a pop-up box that appears when hovered over.
- Print or save selected sections.

“We are excited to offer this enhanced service to make the UDO more accessible to our residents and our development customers,” said Durham City-County Planning Director Patrick Young.

For more information, visit the website or contact Senior Planner Michael Stock by email or (919) 560-4137, ext. 28227.
