

Urban Forestry Links

The links provided below are not owned, created, or maintained by the City of Durham. We are providing them to you to assist you in gathering more information, but we cannot monitor their performance or content.

Duke Forest

The homepage of Duke's research forest. Find out about ongoing research projects, forest management, and recreational features.

International Society of Arboriculture

The ISA is the international body for tree maintenance. It strives to improve the quality of arboriculture practice, promotes research and increase the knowledge of urban tree care, and works to increase public awareness of the benefits of trees and proper tree care. There are great consumer information pages, and you can find a Certified Arborist in your area.

J C Raulston Arboretum

North Carolina State's arboretum in Raleigh. It's a great place to see a wide variety of trees and shrubs. The mission of the arboretum is to introduce new landscape plants into the nursery industry of the state.

National Arbor Day

Ever wonder about the history of Arbor Day? How about the requirements for Tree City USA? This site can answer those questions and more.

National Arborist Association

The NAA is a trade association of commercial tree care firms, established in 1938. Our association develops safety and education programs, standards of tree care practice, and management information for arboriculture firms around the world. The site has good consumer information.

N C Division of Forest Resources

North Carolina's Division of Forest Resources is responsible for forest management in our state. Great educational and kid's pages.

Southern Chapter of the International Society of Arboriculture

The homegrown chapter of the ISA. The Southern Chapter of the International Society of Arboriculture is a non-profit organization comprised of members in Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Puerto Rico and the US Virgin Islands. Our mission is to advance tree care knowledge and practices through research, education, and professional development

US Forest Service

Forest Rangers, forest fires, Smokey the Bear... go to this website to find out what's happening in our nation's forests.
